Reload to refresh your session. It was designed from the outset to be chambered for higherpowered cartridges such as the.38 Special, considered to be a powerful caliber for a concealable pocket revolver of the day.Reshaping the hammer and the butt allows the gun to be drawn quickly with little risk of the weapon snagging on clothing. The halved trigger guard facilitates quick trigger acquisition, even for shooters with large fingers or gloves. Even after the introduction of the Detective Special in 1927, Fitz continued to make custom revolvers for special clientele.Compared to later production models, the First Series used a narrower frame, with reduced clearance between the frontstrap of the gripframe and the rear of the trigger guard. Grip panels were wooden.The ejectorrod was longer and had a groove in its knurled tip; a threeinchbarrel variant was offered, with a yet longer ejector rod. The cylinder latch was smooth, and the trigger spur serrated. The right side frame screw has no locking pin, and the rear half of the front sight is a serrated ramp. The grip panels were plastic in 1947, but were changed back to wood starting in 1955 first with a silvertone Colt medallion, and later a goldtone.Because of this, assigning a given revolver to a particular issue is best done by serial number.A new shroud extended down from the barrel, enclosing and protecting the ejector rod, and the front sight was changed to a full ramp.

New, oversize wood gripstocks were introduced that covered the front frame strap. The Third Series featured improvements to the revolvers internal lockwork as well. As with the previous two Series models, a few nickelplated guns were produced, and a 3inchbarrel variant was again offered.After reorganization, the company restarted production of the Detective Special in 1993. Only a twainch barrel was offered, in blue or hard chrome finish.For the Second Series, caliber options were.32

New Police,.38 New Police, and .38 Special; only .38 Special was offered for the other Series models. During World War II production was discontinued, and the type was not revived following the war's end. Myanmar Police Force and some other countries are still using the batches as officers' sidearms. The 9mm in a 1911 is too short, and trick mags and such are necessary to get them to feed right. That is offset by the much higher cost of .38 Super ammo. Still, if I wanted a .36 caliber 1911, it would be a .38 Super and not a 9mm. Upload them here.
